HATER OF SPARROWS.

Indiana Apiarist's Warfare on the British Bird.

Evann E. Edwards, a prosperous farmer and apiarist, living in the suburbs of Alexandria, Ind., is waging warfare against the English sparrow, and he never loses an opportunity to kill the birds, says the Chicago Inter Ocean. He makes it a point to talk death to the sparrow at every agricultural meeting.

His hatred of the sparrow is deep seated, and he is seeking a deputyship as game warden that he may protect other birds and exterminate the sparrows. "Every red headed woodpecker is worth $100 to the farmer with whom it summers," says Mr. Edwards. "Robins are the farmer's friends, and with the bluebirds are particular sufferers from the English pest."

"I had a family of bluebirds summer with me for years, but now there is a pestiferous sparrow, living 100 yards away, which, every day after the bluebirds come back this year, led a host of sparrows and assaulted the former. After driving out the male these foreigners dispossessed the female, and I reached the scene only to find the disconsolate bluebirds grieving over a nest of picked eggs, which the sparrows had destroyed. The sparrows are the only birds in the world which will not tolerate another feathered companion, even in a wide area. They are killing off and driving away the common birds, and fruits, vegetables, flowers—everything, in fact, in the insect burdened limbs bears witness to the intolerance of the sparrow."

"Tell everybody to kill every sparrow he can, and maybe we can get a bounty on their heads after awhile. Certainly in Madison county it would be money well spent."

The Mikado's Fad.

The mikado of Japan has, or, rather, had, just one fad, says the New York Tribune. He longed to create by means of a more carnivorous diet a taller race of soldiers. Small boys in government schools were fed for six or seven years in the European way. They never became reconciled to it, and it disagreed with them. Nor did they grow any taller than vegetarian children. The doctors charged to look after the experimental diet sent in their report last year. They could think of no better way for securing tall soldiers than by encouraging Japanese to marry Europeans.

Prairie Chickens to Be Plentiful. Reports from western Kansas indicate that prairie chickens will be plentiful again this fall, says the Topeka Capital. Prairie chickens, like the buffalo, succumbed to the advance of the hosts of civilization. During the days of the first pioneers prairie chickens were as plentiful in Kansas as English sparrows are today. As the country settled up they gradually disappeared.
